

Dr. Mete Feridun is a Senior Supervisor at the Bank of England where he is a member of the International Banks Directorate at the Prudential Regulation Authority (PRA). He is responsible for the supervision of a portfolio of leading international banks operating in the UK, identifying, analysing and mitigating risks to their safety and soundness, forming forward-looking judgments on the risks that they pose to the PRA's objective of financial stability. Before joining the PRA, Dr. Feridun served as the director of research at CMPA – London and as the programme leader for BSc Hons Economics and BSc Hons Economics with Banking at the University of Greenwich Business School, where he was the a course leader for Monetary Economics and Banking and Finance in a Global Context courses in the Department of International Business and Economics. Dr. Feridun holds a BSc in Finance degree from Indiana University of Pennsylvania, where he studied as a Fulbright Fellow, graduating as a Magna Cum Laude and Provost Scholar, as well as an MSc degree in Banking and International Finance from Cass Business School. He also holds a PhD degree in economics from Loughborough University in the UK. Dr Feridun has taught various economics, finance and banking courses at Cyprus International University, Loughborough University and Eastern Mediterranean University, where he was an Associate Professor of Economics. He has also served as a visiting researcher at the University of Baltimore and University of Missouri, St. Louis and as a European Commission Erasmus Mundus scholar at University of Economics, Prague. He has also served as an instructor on proper loan administration techniques; credit policy planning; credit monitoring; and asset allocation at the credit management and risk analysis training course for banking professionals, which was organised by the United States Agency for International Development (USAID)-funded Economic Development and Growth for Enterprises (EDGE) project and participated in an extensive World Bank project as an economist.